Myer S. Levin has carpenters at work, remodeling the rear of the Union Dry Goods store, so that he will have more floor space in the coat and suit department to meet the demands of his business. The plans are to move the cashiers' box to a vacant corner beside one of the counters and move the heating fixtures to the sides instead of the middle as they have been in the past, giving him a third more floor space. He will also have his basement remodelled in order to give him more space by moving the partitions and changing it into a store room.

A young lad, who said he was four years of age and gave his name as Johnny Caldo, had a narrow escape yesterday from severe injuries when he was riding and pushing his cart at the same time along the sidewalk on North Main street near the junction of Blackwell. The chauffeur happened to be driving slowly enough so that he had the machine under control and stopped before he hit the boy. After picking the child up it was found that he was more scared than hurt, as he was only bruised a little on one elbow.

In the afterglow of the successful Barre descent on the National Retail Monument Dealers' association convention in Cleveland, Ohio, last week, an attractive silver cup awarded Jones Bros. Co. of Barre for having the best monumental exhibit on the convention floor is exhibited in the north display window at the Cummings & Lewis pharmacy. The cup is a trophy offered by Granite, Marble & Bronze, a Boston trade publication, and was on exhibition at Cleveland during the convention. The inscription appropriately sets forth the purpose of the trophy, the name of the donor and its recipient. Jones Bros' showing of finely wrought Barre granite memorials was one of many exhibits, including a large number from the Barre district. It consisted of six different monuments, five of them polished and one hammered. Each represented an original type of memorial art. The Cleveland Press tells the following story of the award: "A plain monument of light Barre, Vt., hammered granite was awarded the prize cup among 600 competitors at the exhibition of the National Retail Monument Dealers' association at Central armory Thursday. A few roses are its only adornment. Art and material, not price, were considered by the jury. Jones Bros. Co. of Barre made it."
